

ABSTRACT

A rifle mount includes two support legs that are pivotally connected together and which rest on a hunter's thighs to support a rifle in a ready position. The hunter merely moves the rifle into a shooting position when executing a shot, and can aim the rifle by moving his or her thighs.